DRIVER'S SEAT

Know this: I am not an EV guy. Over the years, friends have tried to reason with me about EVs. They have learned to come prepared: To make a sustainability argument, they have to show data about the complete supply chain and life cycle that doesn't exist yet; to talk up the blinding speed of the EV, they have to lay down performance stats that rival those of, say, a Porsche 911 GT3, which can party on the track all day and all night.

My biggest gripe with EVs isn't cultural or infrastructural (though those are certainly gripes). I'm done making the casual statement that EVs are throwaway cars, single-season cars, or vehicular burner phones. It's too easy. The biggest gripe is that when I drive a sports car—the kind that people will spend their kid's college fund to collect and tattoo the car on their backs—I want to learn something new from it every time I take the wheel. A Ferrari 512 or a Porsche Cayman is a treasure chest of secrets, and every time you brake, blipshift, corner, and throttle in, you're picking up a signal you haven't heard before.

That's just one of the things I love about sports cars that I haven't found yet in EVs. On the other hand, I'm willing to admit I might not know everything about electric cars. Mate Rimac, the Croatian wunderkind who formed Rimac Automobili when he was just 21, has been building fascinating electric hypercars for years. In this issue, we dive into Rimac's world, which has what I think is the most fascinating future in this charged-up sector.

Along those lines, duPont REGISTRY Editor-at-Large John Neff dived into the most important things that every EV owner should know before they drop the nozzle and pick up the plug.

Our timepiece correspondent Roberta Naas went big on style this month and laid out the best outfits of the season, including brands from Stefano Ricci and Dorian to Louis Vuitton and Dior. She also looked at the new trend of watches turning back the clock and returning to less bulky profiles, from Carl Bucherer's fetching $45,000 Manero Peripheral Perpetual Calendar to Bulova's elegant and slightly less eye-popping $695 Sutton Pocket Watch.

We also drove some cars, including the Audi RS e-Tron, which continues to refine its all-electric performance (chipping away at my resistance). On our cover this month is the latest from Lotus, one of my favorite marques and one of the greatest builders of sports coupes ever to run a factory line. Now, they're introducing the second electric SUV, the Lotus Emeya. Does it live up to expectations? You'll have to read and find out. And once you do, email me a solid argument about electric cars.

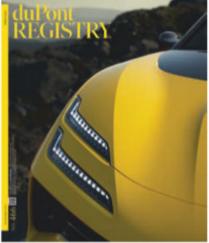

Never lift,

Mike Guy - Editor-in-Chief

 $THE\,EMEYA\,NODS\,TO\,THE\,MARQUE'S\,HERITAGE\,WHILE\,ALSO\,REPRESENTING\,ITS\,FUTURE\text{-}FACING\,IDEALS.$

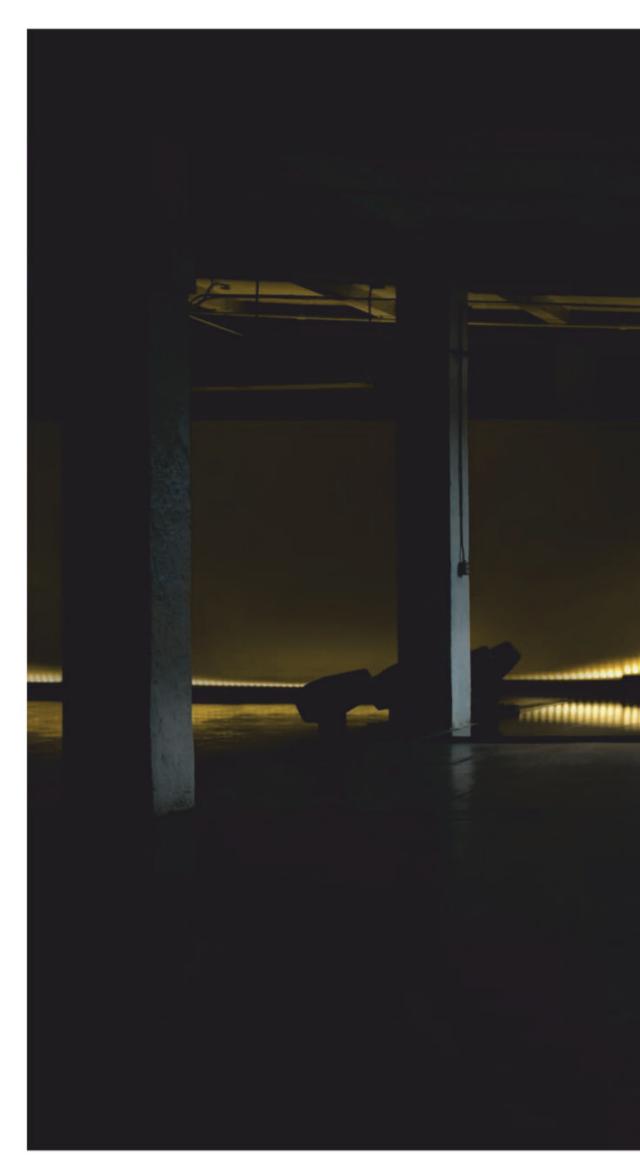

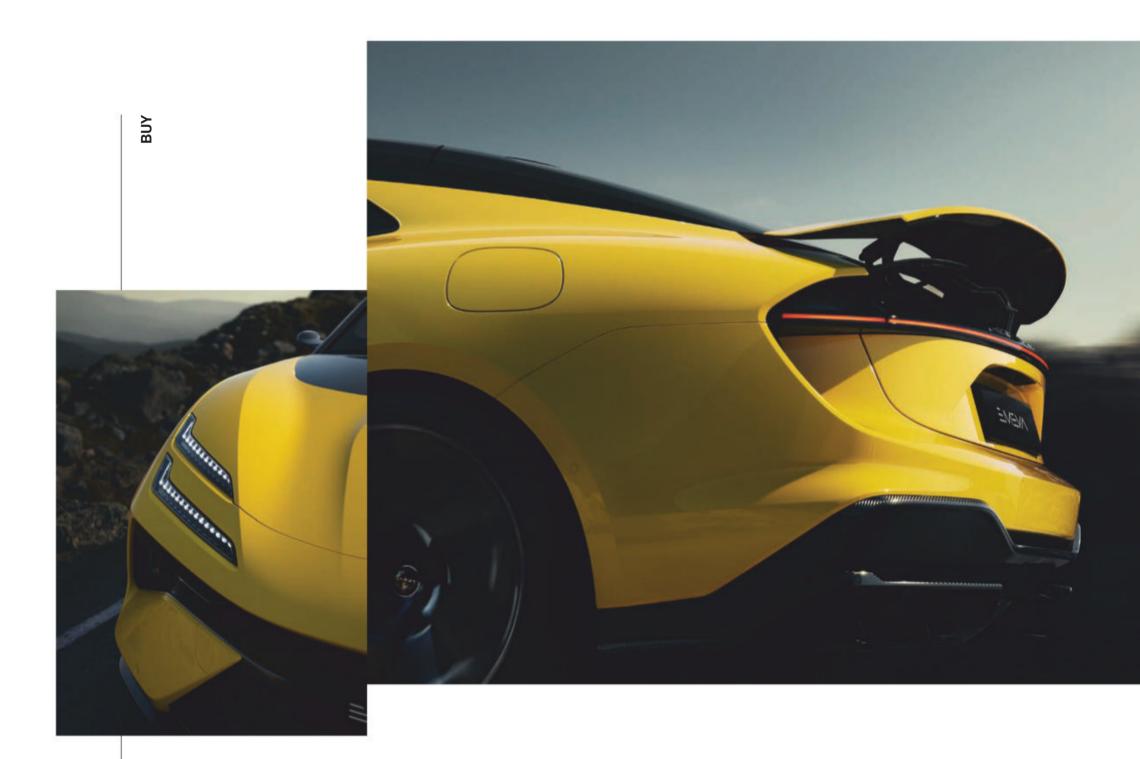

Since its founding in 1948, Lotus has been a boutique purveyor of lithe, if not fully baked, gasoline-powered sports coupes. But, in its quest to sell 100,000 vehicles annually by decade's end, it — along with the Chinese Geely industrial megalith that is now its core stakeholder — is pursuing expansion, and electrification. We've already seen the introduction of the first ever Lotus SUV, the six-figure, battery-powered Eletre. Next in this diversifying lineup is the Emeya, a swoopy four-door GT, built upon the same electric platform, and styled and equipped to compete with driver's cars like the Porsche Taycan and Audi e-tron GT.

This isn't the first time the marque has entered this category. "Lotus actually built a sedan in the past, the Carlton," says Mike Johnstone, vice president of Group Lotus, referring to the brand's rebadged, massaged, and strenuously up-powered version of the Opel Omega of the early 1990s, which was among the world's quickest sedans. "But this will be the first that has a Lotus-only platform."

The Emeya has similarly impressive stats. Its twin electric motors and 102-kilowatt-hour battery can provide up to 905 horsepower, enough to propel the slick sedan from 0 to 60 mph in around 2.7 seconds on its way to a top speed of 159 mph. A dual-speed transmission, on high-test models, enhances off-the-line speed and high-speed efficiency. Active aerodynamics in the front grille, rear diffuser, and rear spoiler help keep it from becoming airborne, and increase range, which should best its chunkier SUV stablemate's 260 to 315 miles. An 800-volt electrical architecture should help expedite recharges, if you can find a fast charger that works and is unoccupied. An electronically controlled air suspension, tuned by Lotus' famedengineers, will help provide sharp, tactile, but compliant handling, long a brand hallmark.

"Emeya is aimed at performance-oriented drivers — people seeking a confident and dynamic experience, a sense of celebration, a strong connection to the road," Johnstone says. "Plus, it has beautifully weighted steering that gives the driver great feedback."

The styling is aggressive, if a bit Taycan-esque, but with a suite of vents that offer intriguing areas of surface relief. The interior is lined in top-tier materials, glistering LCD screens, and a windshield-spanning head-up display, which projects relevant information — enhanced with augmented reality — directly in the driver's sightline. Rear seating can be configured as a pair of buckets or a bench. Watch your head back potentially impactful. A line of light that encircles the body takes its inspiration from the profile of a symbol of our progression."

the wedgy, Giugiaro-designed Series 1 Esprit of the late 1970s.

Also honoring the Esprit is the LIDAR (Light Detection and Ranging) system, which opens like that older car's pop-up headlamps. When and if a practical use case is invented, and regulations allow, it will allegedly be activated, via over-theair software updates, as part of an advanced driver assistance system, so-called autonomous driving.

Pricing for the Emeya will be similar to the Eletre, starting at around $115,000 and escalating to over $150,000 for top-performing models. It will go into production at Lotus' new dedicated factory in Wuhan, China, in 2024 and will roll-out globally in early 2025. "Its unique there either way; the fastback rear pillars look and subtle integrations are a nod to our 75-year heritage," Johnstone says, "and at the same time,

Like all modern EVs currently on the market, the Emeya's interior spotlights state-of-the-art technology in various forms, such as the the head-up display that's been enhanced with augmented reality.

FIND YOUR THRILL

The Audi RS e-tron GT is more than its stats.

WORDS: Gabriel Vega Cortés

EXCLUSIVE CONTENT

Scanthe QR code with your mobile device to read more of our reviews.

It's been almost three years since Audi unveiled the RS e-tron GT in early 2021, and the arena it competes in looks quite different than it did 36 months ago. As the auto industry continues its pivot toward electric vehicles, the list of RS competitors grows yearly.

Thankfully, all of the characteristics that made Audi's flagship a compelling machine in the first place are relevant today. With its curvy but elegant styling, it remains among the best-looking EVs on the market. And thanks to its Porsche underpinnings, it handles far better than anything over 5,100 pounds has a right to. But its competitors haven't exactly sat idle.

While it shares major structural and powertrain components with the Porsche Taycan thanks to a joint development project between the two marques, the Audi RS e-tron GT has always been the more visually exciting pick of the pair.

In contrast to the Porsche's smooth, uncluttered, and relatively minimalist styling, the Audi employs body lines that accentuate the flare of its front and rear fenders. These connect with a massive LED light bar out back, which, combined, work to visually widen the car — an aesthetic made all the more appealing with available colors like my tester's Tactical Green Metallic, which perfectly complements the Santos Brown leather interior.

Looks aside, the greatest strength of the RS e-tron GT is how well it drives. While the standard e-tron GT develops 469 horse-power from two electric motors, stepping up to the range-topping RS pumps that figure up to 590 and, with Boost Mode engaged, temporarily to 637 horsepower. Flat out, Audi's flagship EV will hit 60 mph in as few as 3.1 seconds and top out at 155 mph.

Porsche ties aside, the GT is more than a re-styled Taycan. It rides on an adaptive air suspension system, which Audi configures to be more compliant than the Porsche unit, making the e-tron a more comfortable daily driver despite maintaining tremendous grip and agility in the bends. These softer tuning choices allow the RS to carve out its own identity as an athletic grand tourer.

There's only one concern when hustling the RS e-tron GT up a nice piece of road: its range. With electricity coming from a 93.4-kilowatt-hour battery pack, the EPA estimates its range to be 238 miles, ranking it behind most direct competitors.

Once at a charger, however, the e-tron tops up its pack rather quickly with a 270-kilowatt peak charge rate, allowing it to jump from a 10 to 80 percent charge in around 80 minutes thanks to its 800-volt architecture.

The RS e-tron GT won't be the right EV for stat-focused buyers. Compared to its rivals, it's the slowest to 60 mph and covers the least mileage on a charge. Instead, the RS will appeal to enthusiasts who value an exciting drive.

Cars at this price point should be emotional purchases, not practical ones. With killer looks and a thrilling experience behind the wheel, the e-tron GT still makes a strong case for itself. After all, there's more to a car than stats.

As Mate Rimac continues to shape the future of electric performance vehicles, his legacy is already taking root.

RARE BREED

Mate Rimac on being an outlier, achieving the impossible, and having a little fun.

words: Mike Guy

In the history of carmaking, only a handful of individuals can be considered legitimate prodigies. Most executives rise to the top slowly, advancing through the corporate ranks. Henry Ford is an exception, of course. He was 32 when he formed his company. And there's Mate Rimac, a name that has become synonymous among the cognoscenti with innovation and performance in the high-end EV world. He was 21 when he founded Rimac Automobili in suburban Croatia. An electric hypercar manufacturer, Rimac has become an exemplar in the EV world — a true outlier.

"I never thought of myself that way," Rimac says, speaking from an office in Midtown Manhattan. "I have ideas that are out there in the world. I just have the ability to reach out and grab it. And implement it." He pauses. "It's not enough to have the best idea. You have to execute it. And that execution has to be perfect."

Mate Rimac, an imposing presence with a lively wit and a bushy beard that borders slightly on unkempt, was born Feb. 12, 1988, in Livno, in Bosnia and Herzegovina. Despite his very modest upbringing and the rumblings of war, he showed from a young age a keen interest in tech and especially in automotive engineering. His fascination with electric cars took root when he was a teenager, setting the stage for his company. His path into the world of automobiles was not a conventional one.

"I felt compelled to push the boundaries of what was possible in the realm of electric propulsion," he says.

In 2009, Rimac founded Rimac Automobili. He intended to create the first truly high-performance electric vehicle, one that could rival and surpass Tesla or Fisker. His vision was not just about electrifying cars but joining electrification with automotive excellence — with luxury. The company quickly gained attention for its cutting-edge tech. The first cars were groundbreaking.

An early milestone of Rimac Automobili was the Rimac Concept One, an all-electric supercar unveiled in 2011. The Concept One was not just a car; it was a statement that electric vehicles could deliver exhilarating performance and compete with the best in the automotive world. With a top speed of 220 mph and a 0 to 60 mph time of a mere 2.5 seconds, the Concept One set a new standard for electric hypercars.

"I thought we had really achieved something with that car," he says. "I was modest in a lot of ways — making a car stick in the imagination and the marketplace is next to impossible. But part of me thought it was doable."

Rimac's relentless pursuit didn't stop with the Concept One. The company continued to push the boundaries of electric performance, leading to the development of the Rimac C_Two. Unveiled in 2018, the C_Two hits a top speed of 258 mph and boasts a mind-boggling 0 to 60 mph time of 1.85 seconds. It's a rocket ship.

It's not the speed that makes Rimac special. Inevitably, what sets the marque apart from competitors is its focus on tech integration. The C_Two wields an advanced driver-assistance system, Level 4 autonomous capabilities, and a state-of-the-art infotainment system. Rimac's emphasis on merging cutting-edge technology with high-performance electric propulsion has positioned the company at the forefront of the electric automotive revolution.

Mate Rimac's influence extends beyond the confines of Rimac Automobili. The company has forged strategic partnerships and collaborations with some of the biggest names in the automotive industry. Notably, Rimac has worked closely with Porsche, which acquired a significant stake in the company. This collaboration has resulted in the development of electric powertrains for Porsche's high-performance vehicles, solidifying Rimac's role as a key player in the electric automotive ecosystem.

Rimac's impact on the industry goes beyond traditional automakers. The company's expertise in electric propulsion and battery technology has led to collaborations with other industries, including electric mobility solutions for various applications. Rimac's innovations are not limited to hypercars; they are influencing the broader landscape of electric transportation.

Rimac sees a future where EVs aren't just environmentally conscious totems, but true hypercars.

"I want a car that is always revealing new things," he says. "It has to resonate with a driver in a way that any great sports car does. It's almost a collaboration between car and driver."

Nevertheless, the company's commitment to sustainability and cutting-edge technology positions it as a driving force in the transition to a cleaner and more efficient automotive future.

Rimac's vision extends to the transformation of the entire automotive industry. The future, he says, will be all electric, and the board of directors at VW, where he has a partnership, agrees in his vision and the viability and desirability of electric high-performance vehicles.

Building an electric hypercar from scratch and establishing a foothold in the automotive industry is not easy. However, Rimac is the fork that goes through the concrete wall. Despite headwinds, he completed a funding round in 2020, securing a substantial investment from VW and others. This injection of capital has empowered Rimac Automobili to accelerate its research and development efforts, bringing the company closer to realizing its ambitious goals.

Beyond the boardroom, Mate is a hands-on executive. He is deeply involved in the tech of the company's cars. He's also an advocate for clean energy and is actively involved in initiatives that promote environmental consciousness.

As Mate Rimac continues to shape the future of electric performance vehicles, his legacy is already taking root. Rimac's impact on the automotive extends beyond the electric vehicle niche, influencing the way traditional automakers approach the transition to cleaner and more sustainable transportation.

"I'm not the best carmaker in the world," he says. "But I'm going to steer the conversation around sustainable hypercars. The world needs to be fun, not just green."

You're either jazzed about the switch to electric transportation or have begrudgingly accepted its inevitability. Either way, there will be an electric vehicle (EV) in your garage at some point in the next decade. It's time to get ready, so we've assembled a list of seven things you should know going into our electrified future.

1. SPEED IS KING

The results are in, and they're undisputed: EVs are quicker than gas-powered cars. Lap records have fallen to mighty EVs at most of the world's well-known race courses, and no drag strip is safe from the instant torque of an electric motor. It doesn't even take an electric hypercar like the Rimac Neveratogo silly fast: The Tesla Model S Plaid and Lucid Air Sapphire do it too, as do the $60,000 Kia EV6 GT hat chback and 835-horse power Rivian R1T Quad-Motor pickup truck.

2. MAINTENANCE-FREE

Gas-powered cars require a ton of routine maintenance to hasten their demise, but not EVs. They don't need oil changes, and there are fewer moving parts that can wear out and break. Even their brakes last a lifetime because the power-generating capability of their electric motors do most of the heavy lifting when it comes to stopping. Expect your routine service bill to include a fill up for the windshield washer fluid and a new cabin air filter — that's it.

3. HOME FILL-UPS

Some people act like plugging in an EV is a hassle because it takes so long to charge. Sorry, but driving to a dirty gas station to refuel is much more of a hassle than simply plugging in your caratnight and waking up to a full tank. Yes, this requires a home where you can install a Level 2 car charger, or a condo or apartment that will invest in some, but there's no arguing that charging at home every night is better, easier, and cheaper than refueling at a gas station.

4. BABY CARBON FOOTPRINT

Many of us will buy EVs for environmental reasons, and we can rest assured that EVs leave behind a smaller carbon footprint than gas-powered cars, even when measured from cradle to grave. While it's true the production of an EV is more carbon-intensive than a traditional cardue to the big battery, an EV will make up that deficit within a couple of years — and then it's off to the races. Throw-in emissions-free charging sources like whole-home solar or a hydroelectric-powered grid, and there's no contest.

5. SILENCE ISN'T A VIRTUE

With EVs, silent running is a given, but it's not always the blessing you would imagine. When your car is dead quiet, you hear everything, including perhaps how poorly it was constructed. Every squeak, rattle, and hum that might've been masked by an engine takes center stage beneath a bright spotlight in an EV. And it's not just Teslas; even higher-end luxury brands such as Mercedes-Benzsell squeaky EVs. (We're looking at you, EQS.)

6. ROAD-TRIPPING REALITIES

Our country's public infrastructure for EV charging is a mess, which makes road-tripping in an electric vehicle a pain. If you don't own a Tesla, you're forced to visit notoriously unreliable charging stations run by companies that can't seem toget their act together. And if you do own a Tesla, your days of easy charging are numbered. With almost every automaker on the planet committing to adopt Tesla's NACS charging standard by 2025, those reliable and fast Supercharger stations, some of which are already crowded, will become even more congested with non-Teslas.

7. ETHICAL UNCERTAINTY

Questions remain regarding human rights abuses and child labor in the mining of precious metals like lithium, cobalt, and nickel for batteries. The supply chains for these elements are complicated, so it's difficult to trust an automaker, even when execs attest the battery materials don't come from these horrible places. They're working on it, though. New battery types side-step the issue by using elements such as sodium that are more common.

MAXVERSTAPPENWAS UNSTOPPABLE

If you paid any attention to the 2023 Formula 1 season, even for only a week, you undoubtedly heard rumblings of the Flying Dutchman's dominance. Sure, Max Verstappen has raced well in seasons past, but last year was his to dominate. He left his fellow drivers in the dust, winning a record-setting 19 out of 22 races. (His teammate, Sergio Pérez, snapped up two additional victories for Red Bull Racing, the inevitable Constructors Champion.)

DANILL RICCIARDO IS BACK Fan favorite Daniel Ricciardo made his return to Formula 1 when a seat opened with Alpha Tauri when Nyck de Vries was released. Unfortunately for Ricciardo, he broke his hand during the Dutch Grand Prix and had to sit out for four races. Upon his return, he eventually placed seventh at the Mexico City Grand Prix and gave Alpha Tauri their best placement of the year.

LEWIS HAMILTON RETURNS TO POLE With the rise of Max Verstappen, eyes have been on Lewis Hamilton and the continued struggles with his car. For Hamilton fans, the Hungary Grand Prix proved to be a treat — as the seven-time world champion finally snapped a slump that's seen him missing pole position since the Saudi Arabian Grand Prix in 2021. Unfortunately, this result was his only pole position during the 2023 season, as either Red Bull or Ferrari claimed it at every other race.

ALONSO'S RETURN TO FORM Fernando Alonso made the move to Aston Martin for the 2023 season, and it appears he made the right decision. Out of the gate, he placed third at the Bahrain Grand Prix and kept up the same pace for the remainder of the season. Who would've thought, that in 2023, Alonso would be racing for Aston Martin and finishing in fourth overall in the World Drivers Championship?

The 41-millimeter Grand Lange 1 from A. Lange & Söhne rises only 8.2 millimeters off the wrist.

With so many watch brands turning to their archives for inspiration, and as fashion continues its cyclical course, the worlds of horology and style are enjoying a return to retro. Vintage-inspired time-pieces are all the rage, and with them come some significant changes — changes that will likely drive the watch business for the next few years. Among them: a penchant for thin and ultra-thin styles, more universally wearable sizes, and a renewed interest in yellow gold. Pay attention. Classics are back.

Easily one of the most notable trends in dress watches (and even sport watches) in the past year or two is the reduction in case size. Brands that were known for oversized 48- and 46-millimeter diameters shaved sizes down in an effort to make the watches more wearable, less clunky, and more appealing to all genders. Today, most companies produce 43-millimeter sizes and smaller, with many dropping to 40- and 38-millimeter pieces. This trend dominated in the 1970s and '80s before the craze for oversized watches really kicked in.

The return to smaller case diameters also signals a return to slimmed down case thicknesses. No longer do watches have to raise up from the wrist by half an inch. Some ultra-thin watches of today measure a scant thickness the size of a dime or a quarter. Some of this attention to ultra-thin movements and finished watches was the result of top-tier brands vying to produce the world's thinnest timepiece, but a lot centers around a nostalgia for bygone eras when watches were slimmer.

Make no mistake: Slimming down a mechanical watch and reducing its diameter is no easy feat. Brands often spend years in research and development to learn how to miniaturize existing movement components and fit all of the necessary parts into a smaller space. Sometimes a movement has to be totally redesigned. Another consideration is the strength of tinier parts; when pared down in size, they must maintain their rigidity and robustness.

In recent years, brands such as Richard Mille (a pillar in the world of oversized three-dimensional watches), Bulgari, Piaget, and Audemars Piguet have set world records for slimness in time-only watches and also those that boast multiple complications. As of press time, Richard Mille holds the record for the world's slimmest mechanical automatic watch; the almost $2 million RM-UP 01 Ferrari watch measures a mere 1.75 millimeters (0.06889764 inches).

With the return to classic styling, other changes come into play, including cleaner dials, tonal concepts, and even an interest in two-tone steel and gold watches and yellow gold timepieces. In fact, the re-emergence of yellow gold marks a departure from the rose gold and white metal watches that proliferated over the past few decades. While some luxury brands, especially those that also create jewelry, maintained a presence in yellow gold watches, the current trend reflects a broader adoption by both exclusive luxury brands and larger-production ones. Some watch pundits say there are multiple reasons for this, including the fact that gold in its purest form is yellow, and today's consumers are very interested in purity, authenticity, and historical influences.

Additionally, many younger consumers, having grown up in the rose gold era, view yellow gold as a novel and refreshing choice. As many embark on watch collecting, they turn to the pre-owned market for better pricing. This also means that the vintage pieces they are buying from 30 or 40 years ago are predominantly yellow gold. As their peers notice yellow on the wrists of their watch aficionado friends, yellow becomes more sought after. Plus, this generation's desire to stand out in a crowd typically lands on yellow gold. Each of these trends is reflected in many of the newest watches that emerged last year and will continue to be unveiled throughout 2024.

4. Octo Finissimo

Bulgari offers slimmer options with its Octo Finissimo automatic watch with an ultra-thin, 2.23-millimeter movement. It's housed in a 40-millimeter satin-polished, 18-karat yellow gold case with a matching gold bracelet and brown lacquered dial. Only 50 pieces will be made, all exclusive to the United States.

5. Sutton Pocket Watch $695

Bulova, with a rich American history, just introduced mechanical pocket watches to its Sutton line, which is part of its Heritage collection. The watch boasts a skeletonized dial to showcase the movement, and to keep prices affordable, the case is created in gold-tone steel.

6. Aqua Terra Shades $6,600

Omega creates the steelon-steel, 38-millimeter Aqua Terra Shades collection, which includes a colored dial reminiscent of the past. Powered by a self-winding movement (caliber 88000) with Co-Axial escapement, the watch is a Certified Master Chronometer with high-tech components that make it resistant to magnetic fields.

7. Coin Watch

$25,400

Corum continues to create its beloved Coin Watch in a 36-millimeter size to accommodate the American Eagle 22-karat yellow gold coin that makes up its dial. The watch is powered by an automatic movement and features a yellow gold crown set with a full-cut diamond.

THE BIRTH OF A NEW ERA

VD 75

VanDutch Center Miami is proud to announce the All New VanDutch 75.

Offering 40 knots of speed, superior livability and comfort, along with limitless customization, the VanDutch 75 is set to be the pinnacle of first-class cruising. Mixing the classic VanDutch style with a Mediterranean essence, the model represents a new era of Made in Italy design.

External lines maintain the timeless style behind the success of our production, combined with elegant and technical details that work for maximum integration. The intelligent distribution of spaces makes the most of the volumes, offering livability and excellent comfort levels.

Family. Passion. Innovation.

For over 75 years, Tom Masano Auto Group proudly offers top-tier new car franchises, featuring BMW, Ford, Lincoln, Mercedes-Benz, and the nation's largest Maybach inventory. Our exceptional portfolio extends to include Certified Pre-Owned vehicles. Our unique blend of tradition and modernity strikes a perfect balance between classic car buying and efficient online transactions, all delivered with unparalleled hospitality. Our mission extends beyond selling cars; it's about nurturing a healthier community and a sustainable future, crafting a multi-generational legacy of excellence.

MASANO & CO.

An Automotive Wonderland!

What truly sets us apart is our awe-inspiring masterpiece, "Automotive Wonderland." This sprawling former brass factory is a 30-acre, 250,000 square-foot automotive utopia which utterly transforms the car-buying experience. From the captivating 200-car AutoTorium to dedicated spaces for art, music, photography, and even agriculture, Masano & Co. embodies what a passionate, third-generation family-owned business can achieve, elevating the ordinary into the extraordinary.
